

Generic course descriptions

Approved by Dr. Cheek in December 2021. For use in instances where the department did not provide a description when the course was originally created.

Dissertation: Faculty-supervised investigative study that results in the development and writing of a doctoral dissertation.

Independent Study: Faculty-supervised individual study in an area of special interest not readily available through conventional course offerings.

Internship: Practical experience in a public, private or non-profit organization, supervised by a professional with an academic component overseen by a UNM instructor.

Master's Thesis: Faculty-supervised investigative study that results in the development and writing of a master's thesis.

Problems: Individual research into an area proposed by the student and conducted under the direction of a faculty member.

Seminar: A faculty-taught course emphasizing investigation, evaluation, and discussion of areas of specialized knowledge or inquiry relevant to the profession or field of study.